

How to use the Tapatoru Reflective Practice Cards

- » First, separate out the cards by colour.
- » The dark blue cards are the start of each question. There are 6 altogether, so you'll end up discarding two of these that you don't use.
- » Then there are four purple cards. These form the middle sections of your questions so you can experiment with pairing them up in different ways.
- » And then there are five yellow cards to make up the final part of each question. You'll need to use four out of the five, so just discard the one that you don't use.
- » There are also some yellow cards that are prompts to get you thinking and talking and answering with a few more details.
- » You, or a partner, can select the prompts that work best for you. Some are in English. Some are in Te Reo, and others have more of a Pacific focus. Again, use the ones that are relevant to you and your context.
- » Here's an example of a single question that you might come up with –
“How have you maintained the wairua or spirituality or wellbeing of your learners when you facilitated learning and/or learning support?”
- » Have a play. When you're getting started you don't need to settle on any one particular combination. Later, when you're working towards your Tapatoru portfolio you will need to narrow down your selection to four distinct questions that work for you.
